Skills, Training, and Employment Access for the Development of Youth...that is the substance of the County's STEADY Work program.

Wayne County Community Schools provides youth with coaching and on-the-job training to promote the softer skills necessary for securing and keeping a job. These skills include punctuality, consistent attendance, behaving on a job site, accepting constructive criticism, and many more.

One of the biggest highlights of STEADY Work is their Small Jobs Program. This program provides young people with paid opportunities to do hands-on work and complete larger-scale projects in and around their community. Through this program, you can book any of their services, and a designated crew of STEADY Work youth - with the oversight of a crew leader - will get the job done at a fair price. You get the job done, AND support the youth of Wayne County by requesting a project and getting the work done.

New Tool Helps Youth Remove Sexually Explicit Images from the Internet

The new Take It Down tool helps combat child sexual exploitation by enabling youth to remove sexually explicit images of themselves from the Internet. Developed by the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children, an OJJDP grantee, Take It Down works by generating a unique digital fingerprint—a “hash value”—that identifies copies of sexually explicit images or videos. The launch of this tool comes as law enforcement agencies are reporting a dramatic rise in a crime known as sexortion—when children and teens are coerced into sending explicit images online and then extorted for money or additional explicit material. Perpetrators often release the images even after youth send additional images or money—typically, hundreds of dollars or more.

Sextortion can occur after a child has shared an image with someone they trusted, but many children are targeted by strangers posing online as peers, often using fake accounts and communicating via popular social media sites, gaming sites, or video chat applications. Take It Down is a free service. Youth select the content they want “hashed,” and the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children shares the unique identifier with participating online platforms, which then scan their public or unencrypted sites and apps and remove the images. Users can remain anonymous and the image or video they identify remains on their device; they do not need to upload it. Participating platforms include Facebook, Instagram, and multiple pornographic websites. Meta (the parent company of Facebook and Instagram) provided initial funding for Take It Down’s development.”
